

English as a Second Language (ESL)

Tutors help the immigrant population to improve their English skills; as a result, students are able to improve their families' quality of life by improving workforce skills and participating in the community.

- Workplace Tutoring Groups: Tutors go to hotels, restaurants, and other workplaces to teach small groups of employees English as a Second Language. Employers provide time off for employees to be tutored (typically three hours per week) and often pay them for this time.
- Community Tutoring Groups: English as a Second Language tutors meet with small groups of students in the community. Current sites include Santa Fe Community College, public libraries, churches, health clinics, schools, and community centers.
