

Juvenile Community Corrections

Juvenile Community Corrections is a program that serves adjudicated youth currently on probation, or those who are on supervised release. Referrals are made to this program by juvenile probation officers, district court judges, attorneys, juvenile correction facilities, or the supervised release panel. The JCC program provides services based on the client's individual needs, but focuses primarily on teaching life skills so the client can learn how to appropriately manage their affairs and set goals for their future. JCC case managers also closely work with the schools, juvenile probation officers, and others that are involved in the progress of the client.
