New Energy Economy

Our strategy is to build the political power and regulatory/policy framework necessary to shift energy investments from fossil fuel and nuclear based conventional generation to clean alternatives. Our unique approach combines targeted legal campaigns with public education and engagement that make complex energy and regulatory issues accessible to the community and opens up spaces for community participation and influence on energy decision-making. We intervene in regulatory cases to advocate for outcomes that benefit the people and the planet. In addition to our legal and policy work, NEE installs community-scale solar systems in communities. Our first installation was on the Navajo Nation's Chapter House. Our most recent installation was on Tewa Women United's community center.
