

River Classroom

River Classroom, now in its 6th year, is a place-based experiential education program in which NMWC staff engage students in a variety of place-based, hands-on, rigorous science lessons. We work with the same groups of students throughout the school year, over consecutive school years, with curricula based on Next Generation Science Standards (NGSS) and New Mexico Public Education Department's science standards. The curricula is developed in conjunction with the classroom teacher so that lessons augment what students learn in the classroom.

Studies conducted since the 1970's have clearly indicated that science is best taught in place-based, experiential curricula. Place-based learning makes science more relevant to students' experiences and greatly increases student engagement (Hellar et al. 2003, Gruenewald 2003, Akey 2006). Our programs relate science concepts to the places our students live and play so that students can better understand and apply this knowledge to their lives. Our unique teaching methods and robust evaluation techniques, allows us to effectively educate youth in New Mexico to address the challenges facing wildlife and habitats.
