The Partnership for Arts-In-Medicine

For the past seventeen years, AIM has been a forerunner in providing this kind of care for the residents of New Mexico. We have demonstrated how the healing arts engage and inspire people to actively participate in their own healing processes and find self-empowerment, hope, and peace even in the midst of suffering, fear, anxiety, and depression. Further, we have offered new and meaningful employment for New Mexican artists and a robust appreciation of their contribution to a healthcare system of the future - where there is less dependence on providers, pharmaceuticals, and technology.

The Partnership for Arts-In-Medicine

Supporting the mission of UNM's Arts-in-Medicine Program (AIM), The Partnership for Arts in Medicine (PAIM) improves health and wellness by engaging people in their innate powers of creativity and healing. Through creative encounters, we restore relationships with self and other while also transforming communities and medical environments.

As per the National Center for Complementary and Integrative Health, the demand for complementary, alternative, and integrative healthcare is on the rise. For the past seventeen years, AIM has been a forerunner in providing this kind of care for the residents of New Mexico. We have demonstrated how the healing arts engage and inspire people to actively participate in their own healing processes and find self-empowerment, hope, and peace even in the midst of suffering, fear, anxiety, and depression. Further, we have offered new and meaningful employment for New Mexican artists and a robust appreciation of their contribution to a healthcare system of the future - where there is less dependence on providers, pharmaceuticals, and technology.
